Dylan Townsend stands on the beach watching commercial jets fall out of the sky like leaves twirling in the wind. A wing shears off the one closest to the shore just before it splashes down in the seas. Why is she telling him this outlandish story? What sort of Tourist Agency would offer people a front row seat at the end of the world? More importantly, why would anyone book such a vacation if there wasn't any way to get home afterward. "Why would anyone buy a ticket on the Titanic if they knew it was doomed?" "Relax Dylan," she had assures him. "If you know it's going to sink you could bring a raft." As she paces in the sand watching the sky he realizes that however wild her story may be, he loves her. Maybe Izzy is a time travel tour guide after all. In truth he is more likely to be harmed by her boyfriend than the imminent apocalypse. What is he going to about that sticky situation? "Come on," she orders, pulling on his arm.
